

This is one of my favourite photos. It's of my wife, Peggy. We met about 10 years ago and we've been married for about 5. She's not from England- she was born in Auckland, New Zealand. When she was about 10 her family immigrated to Scotland, so she grew up in Edinburgh. So she speaks English with a slight Scottish accent but sometimes she uses Kiwi expressions, too

In her free time, she usually goes to the gym and we love going for really long walks with our dog, Rover. He's a 3-year-old Labrador. He's really fun.

As you can see, she's very attractive- she's tall and thin with long blond hair and she's got these amazing big green eyes. But that wasn't what made me fall in love with her. No, it's her personality. She's really kind and affectionate and is really funny too.

In this picture, she's on the beach and she's dancing. In fact that's pretty typical because she's a dance teacher, and dancing is her passion. I've seen her do all sorts of dancing- ballet, jazz, ballroom dancing; you name it, she's done it. So I was at the beach with her in Brighton and with my uncle and my aunt too and there's a radio on and she stood up and started dancing and she kept going and after a while there was a whole crowd of people watching her. And she didn't even notice them. She just let herself go. Amazing.
